WHO THEY ARE

Corporación Universitaria Minuto de Dios (Uniminuto) is a university with 60,000 students on 42 sites throughout Colombia, as well as a distance education program for students in remote areas. Students typically come from the three lowest of the six socioeconomic segments defined by the Colombian government, and most of the sites are located in low-income neighborhoods. Almost two-thirds of Uniminuto’s students are women, a point of particular pride since many of the campuses are in areas where women have not previously had access to higher education.

HOW THEY REACH THE BOP

To make education more accessible to people at the base of the pyramid, Uniminuto seeks out local public and private partners to help lower tuition fees and works with the government of Colombia to offer long-term student loans to people at the base of the pyramid. Tuition costs BOP students between US$400 and $1400 per semester, which are subsidized prices, and through its financing, Uniminuto requires students to pay just US$100 to $200 per month. Uniminuto’s 42 sites are spread throughout low-income neighborhoods in cities, small towns, and jungle settlements. Only 28 percent of students attend weekday classes—33 percent take evening programs and another 39 percent are enrolled in distance and virtual education. Most of the students work while they study. Uniminuto offers academic programs according to the needs of each region. About half of Uniminuto’s students attend technical and technological (three-year) programs and the rest attend professional programs.

UNIMINUTO’S IMPACT

The university benefits people living at the base of the pyramid not only by lending them the money to go to a high-quality school, but also by encouraging its students to volunteer in low-income communities, requiring social work for graduation. Most importantly, by demonstrating that there is a need for low-cost higher education, Uniminuto has inspired other institutions to adopt the same model.

GEOGRAPHY/EXPANSION
Uniminuto expects to have more than 110,000 students by 2018.

KEY DEVELOPMENT RESULTS
Uniminuto estimates that two thirds of their customers, or nearly 40,000 students in 2011, live at the base of the pyramid. On average, students’ household income is approximately US$500 per month at the time of their registration.

By demonstrating that there is a need for low-cost higher education, Uniminuto has inspired other institutions to adopt the same model, oriented to improve education according to the country needs and its development objectives.

In the past ten years, Uniminuto has gone from a university with a single campus of 2,000 students to almost 60,000 students on 42 sites.
